BIO.

Joshua Crowley is a Sydney based designer. As a young member of the Slashie Generation, Josh's focus is on a multi disciplined practice building layered designs that are flexible ongoing projects that develop with the flow and ebb of technology and design culture.

Working across the full spectrum of mediums, Joshua has translated Print to Web through his work on the student newspaper Degree°, brought colour and shape to Sydney based FBi Radio, and hand crafted limited run zines such as Cardboard Collective and Life, Love and Death.

Joshua is currently undergoing his Honours year at UWS with a focus on using action research methodology to build a online student community with his peers to resource design culture and campus community within his course.

He likes Team Fortress 2, Radios, HTML 5, The Whitest Boy Alive and caramel milkshakes.
